

May Residential Week

Early in May, we held an in-person residential week for the class of 2022. Students heard from faculty and guest speakers, including Keegan-Warren Clem, JD, Jesús Ortega, LMSW, and Adewole Adamson, MD, MPP, and spent time socializing and networking with classmates. The week ended with the students presenting their Experience Learning Projects, which require real-world implementation of high-value care. Admissions is now rolling for the Class of 2023; learn more about the MS in Health Care Transformation program.

Learn more

Lead Change in Your Organization

Want to learn more about how to improve strategy within your organization or the financial concepts necessary to manage a value-based environment? Enroll in the fall executive education programs, Strategy for Health Care Transformation and Financial Acumen for Health Care Leaders. Reserve your spot today!

Learn more

Health Sciences in Africa

Brendan Hardy, director of recruiting, admissions, and partnership development, had an online discussion with a cohort of 15 young women from ROI Labs Africa, a health sciences mentorship program for African girls and women in high schools and higher education learning institutions seeking to build a career in health sciences. They discussed strategies that combine networks with learning outcomes to achieve greater value in higher education.

Learn more

Interprofessional Health Showcase Awards

Girija Hariprasad, Dell Med and MS in Health Care Transformation student; Dell Med students Safiyya Zaidi, Allison Teng, Emily Yan, and Arjun Srivastava; and faculty advisor Steve Steffensen won the “Best in Community Engagement” award at the Interprofessional Health Showcase hosted by UT’s Center for Health Interprofessional Practice and Education. Congratulations!

Learn more

Alumni News

A Value-Based Approach

Congratulations to Dell Medical School’s class of 2022! Check out this article featuring MS Health Care Transformation alum Kaylee O’Connor Leathers on how she’ll bring the

Alumni Spotlight: Bethlyn Gerard

In this spotlight video, MS in Health Care Transformation alum Bethlyn Gerard, director of advancing care excellence at Southwestern Health Resources, talks about her goal for lessons she learned in the program to The Ohio State University College of Medicine, where she will train as a plastic surgeon.

Learn more

transforming health care, how the program helped her move up in her organization, and why others should pursue a degree in Health Care Transformation.

Watch here

